National Etiquette Week is right around the corner. What a great reminder to practice all those little things our moms and grandmas have taught us.

The common courtesy of a please and thank you or holding a door open for someone brings kindness to our school and to our world. From the time children are able to speak parents coach their children on manners. They are being groomed from a young age on what is proper etiquette.

Thank you parents for reminding your children that how we treat others and simple acts of kindness matter. What a pleasure it is to have your children greet me by name when they come into the building in the morning. A greeting along with eye contact and a smile is a lesson that will take your children far. A child of any age can learn to be cordial.

It is special to see older siblings looking out for and being protective of their younger siblings. All siblings bicker and have their moments but they truly love each other. I see siblings and even cousins helping young ones out of the car, taking a sibling by the hand and walking them to class and helping to carry belongings into school. If your family doesn't look so picture perfect, it's ok. Every family has its moments and it's a series of lessons along the way.

It is so easy to let the little things slide. It can be quicker and easier for the parent to clear the table, pick up the backpack and hang up the jacket, but our job is training these young children so they become responsible adults.

Please
AND Thank You
